Neutron star A neutron star is a dense star composed almost entirely of neutrons; only a few percent of the matter in a neutron star is composed of protons, the proton fraction being far too low to support a stable nuclear equilibrium. According to most models, at least 98% of the mass is in the form of neutrons. The masses of neutron stars lie within the range 1.35–2.1 solar masses (for a distance of 10 kpc). A typical radius for a neutron star is 10 km. Creation About 10% of all stars end their lives as neutron stars. It is the gravitational collapse of the outer envelope of the star that produces this energy, as well as the development of a rotating body and a magnetic field. Unlike white dwar

Update: The sync still work, but I cant't install on my own PC. I uninstalled the app form my laptop and now the install works fine. I also have this issue.Essential role for microtubule-associated protein-1B in targeting the motor protein dynein to the lysosome. Microtubule-associated protein 1B (MAP1B) is a major cytoskeletal protein that is present in neurons and non-neuronal cells. It has been postulated to link actin-based structures to microtubules and to promote microtubule dynamics. Little is known about the function of MAP1B within cells. We show that in non-neuronal cells, MAP1B and dynein are co-localized on perinuclear foci and in neurites. Moreover, dynein is also co-localized with microtubule plus ends, and removal of MAP1B results in a marked reduction in the rate of microtubule dynamics and growth cone advance. We identify the MAP1B-binding domain within dynein and use heterologous expression in HeLa cells to show that this interaction can promote a microtubule plus-end-dependent microtubule plus-end accumulation and promote microtubule growth. The ability of MAP1B to target dynein to the lysosome provides a mechanism by which dynein could promote microtubule growth and advance the plus ends. We propose that MAP1B may be involved in the development and/or maintenance of neuronal polarity.

animation my family Great updates! I went to the Dr. yesterday, and he said my feet are looking great! I only weigh 195 lbs instead of the former 195.5! He also told me to keep those elliptical trainers...they don't hurt as much at night. He also said he didn't think it was a likely thing that I'd have a hernia operation, but to keep my eyes peeled. So, while he was assessing me, I was listening to music, playing the ukulele and practicing the piano, all in one sitting! I'm more than pleased with the Dr. update! I actually felt
