It is the second directorial venture of Nana Patekar after the superhit action film Angaarey (1986). The film stars Patekar as Mahesh, a black market arms dealer and underworld don, who in a bid to become the next don of Bombay, joins the rival gang of the underworld D-Company and begins a life of crime. His life is one of danger and risks, but also one of love, friendship and sacrifice, as he seeks to find a balance in his life. The film won the National Film Award for Best Feature Film in Hindi. It also won the Filmfare Award for Best Film – Hindi. It was one of the biggest grossers of that time in India. The film was the first to star Nana Patekar as the main lead. It was the first film in the history of the country to feature a mixed ethnic cast. Plot

Mahesh Sharma (Nana Patekar) is a friendless, rich Delhi college boy who has no problems with money. But with the emergence of the Mumbai underworld as a national phenomenon, Mahesh has become a black-market arms dealer. Mahesh is adopted by a young widow, Laxmi (Neelam), after her brother dies in an accident and she is left to raise her two children alone.

The children are a six-year-old girl, Jyoti (Nikita Dutta) and her sister, five-year-old Kaveri (Jhil-murti). Mahesh goes to Mumbai where he meets Laxmi's brother, Ramesh (Amitabh Bachchan) and takes on the role of a goon and worker for his elder brother Anand (Ajay Devgn) and his gang. Anand's gang controls all drug-trafficking in the city, though he does not enter the underworld and is not involved in any illegal activities. Anand's gang is closely associated with the underworld D-Company, whose head is a respected don, named Sardar Saab (Gulshan Grover). Anand is not keen on joining Sardar's gang but is forced to do so because of Mahesh. Mahesh, who has fallen in love with Laxmi, begins to suspect her of infidelity. He then learns from Ramesh that Laxmi's husband had died while on a military mission 82157476af
